Pony Express Route West Glitters With Old History

22 Jan 1966

By ROBERT MITCHELL

Deseret News Staff Writer

Utah has a band of history across its center — that when traveled after the snow melts in the spring — glitters with history like the stones in a diamond tiara.

Sprinkled along the swath of dry desolate land are waypoints that tell of death, heartache and man's race with time.

Names like Deep Creek, Burnout, Round, Willow Springs, Boyd, Fish Springs, Black Rock, Dugway, Riverbed, Simpson Springs, Lookout Pass, Rush Valley, East Rush Valley, Camp Floyd, mark stops riders of the Pony Express made in taking mail from the Nevada border to Salt Lake City.

ROUTE FEATURED

The route was made famous during the short-lived run of the PE from April 3, 1860 until Oct. 24, 1861, when the transcontinental telegraph connection at Salt Lake City spelled its doom. It is featured in "Our Public Lands," magazine of the Bureau of Land Management. The story is by Terral King.

Most of the former station stops — some completely gone, others in ruin, and some intact — are on BLM-administered lands. The public is welcome to

FAIRFIELD

Out of Salt Lake City, the place to start the trip is at Fairfield, west of Lehi on Utah 73, a raucous boomtown spawned by the arrival of Gen. Albert Sidney Johnston's "Utah" army.

The old inn has been restored by the Utah Park and Recreation Commission as a tourist attraction. Picnic places and well-landscaped grounds still make it a rest stop today.
